While these substances may be present in our products, by their very nature, our cable products are infrequently handled. As such, these constituents are not readily accessible and are therefore exempt from the Prop 65 labeling requirements.

This determination is based on a Consent Judgment Settlement Agreement (San Francisco Superior Court Cases 312962 and 320342) where it was agreed that "Cords and Covered Products", because of their size, weight or function, are infrequently handled. Examples of infrequently handled cords and covered product, in accordance with this Consent Judgment Settlement Agreement, are: building wire, printer cables, riser/plenum cable, speaker wire, telecom data cable, telecom power cable, telephone power and data cords, thermostat cable, utility cable, signal cable, power control/instrumentation/cable, utility wire and cable. Also exempt are cords that are internal components of products not normally accessible to a consumer during ordinary use. Champlain Cable Corporation believes the products it supplies to its customers meets this exemption. Hence, the material is exempt from the aforementioned Prop 65 labeling regulation.

The information provided in this Product Disclosure, and the identification of materials listed as Reportable under Prop 65 is correct to the best of Champlain Cable Corporation's knowledge, information, and belief. This disclosure is designed only as a guide for regulatory compliance to Prop 65's labeling requirements. It is not to be construed as a warranty or quality specification. In the end, customers are responsible for determining the applicability of specific laws and regulations based on the ultimate individual usage of our products.
